Affirmative Action And Racial Preference

Opponents of affirmative action say Latinos have made significant progress without preferential treatment, making up 25% of undergraduates last year, double their share two decades ago. Supporters of affirmative action note that Latinos make up more than half of California's high school seniors, with a graduation rate above 80 percent.

The book continues with an essay in defense of race preference by my friend and colleague, James Sterba. He calls what he defends “affirmative action, ” and he defines affirmative action so that it will encompass both unobjectionable, non-preferential efforts to be fair and outright race preference. He is at liberty to define and defend as he pleases, of course.
