Collaboration and conflict management are not taught in design school and yet every designer is expected to know how to work well with others. The talent and technical skill of a designer does not alone ensure project success. Designers must excel at dealing with other people.

The first idea is that marketing and design teams should unite around the idea of performance. Dan believes that focusing on performance can align marketing and design teams to better solve problems together. In marketing, we can have clever copy and the best targeting, but if it doesn't perform, it's not viewed as a success.

The architect typically hires the design consultant and the owner typically hires the MAS consultant. In some cases this arrangement can result in a more adversarial relationship rather than a collaborative one, especially if the two consultants are not able to work closely together. I prefer to team directly with the MAS consultant if possible.
