to Know About Simplified Characters

Chinese characters do not constitute an alphabet or a compact syllabary. Rather, the writing system is roughly logosyllabic; that is, a character generally represents one syllable of spoken Chinese and may be a word on its own or a part of a polysyllabic word.

For example, the traditional character 𠄎 has 10 strokes, while its simplified version 𠄎 only has 3 strokes.

However, there are some simplified characters with more strokes than their simplified versions. For example, the traditional character 𠄎 has 11 strokes, while the simplified version 𠄎 has 12 strokes.
